

KANSAS HEALTH EQUITY SUMMIT

Call for Poster Presentations

ABOUT THE SUMMIT While biology, genetics and individual behaviors play a key role in health differences, many health outcomes are more substantially affected by social, economic and environmental factors. People are heavily impacted by the places they work and live, and the diverse populations that make up their community networks can be powerful influencers of both health and well-being. For most healthcare and community-based organizations, a focus on these social determinants of health is not new. However, it is important that we do not only focus on inequities that come from outside the healthcare system. Potential bias within the healthcare system can exacerbate the impact of those social and economic factors at play within our communities. In order to make meaningful change, we must seek to address bias and inequity from both within and outside of the healthcare delivery system.

CALL FOR POSTER PRESENTATION One of the goals of the Kansas Health Equity Summit is to provide participants with the opportunity to learn from what others are doing. We are seeking specific examples of best or promising practices that have been proven successful in addressing inequities in health outcomes, either directly or indirectly. We invite community organizations, academic institutions, provider organizations, and other interested partners to submit poster presentations to be shared with our Summit participants.

Potential poster topics include:

- Community Partnerships/Collaboration around health equity or gaps in care.
- Payer Partnerships/Collaboration around health equity or gaps in care.
- Innovative ways you have identified and used data to address health equity or gaps in care.
